

European Auto Sales a Potential Negative for Magna

Description

Car sales in Europe fell 10% in March, marking the 18th consecutive month of declines. The real pain was felt in Germany which suffered a remarkable 17.1% decrease.

Although the bulk of their operations are based in North America, the 3 big Canadian auto parts suppliers do have European operations. Tabled below are the 2012 European revenues that were generated by each.

Company	2012 European Revenues	% of Total
Magna Int'l (TSX:MG,NYSE:MGA)	$10,089	33%
Martinrea (TSX:MRE)	547	19%
Linamar (TSX:LNR)	493	15%

Magna, Martinrea, and Linamar are off 2.4%, 0.8%, and 1.3% thus far today. This is probably a combination of these weak European results as well as a soft market.

Although weak European car sales may have a short-term impact, the reality is that a strong U.S. market is helping to offset the European weakness. In addition, this weakness could turn out to be a long-term positive as each has the financial flexibility to take advantage and ensure a strong rebound once the clouds part.

Though cyclical, these auto parts suppliers are well run and financially sound, just the kind of businesses Canadian investors deserve to own. While these types of companies are relatively scarce
